Other	Since becoming world number one for the first time January 2004 – confirming his status as the most successful French squash player of all-time - Thierry Lincou has continued to assert himself as a major force on the international squash circuit. Despite turning 34 this year, the tireless Frenchman shows no signs of winding down – and in August completed his ninth unbroken year in the world's top ten. In 2009, Lincou celebrated his eighth successive appearance in the Super Series Finals, at Queen's Club in London, and reached the final for the fourth time. It was his fellow countryman Gregory Gaultier that prevented him for winning the trophy for the second time since 2004 – but Lincou made up for it in April when he reached the final of the Irish Open in Dublin, this time beating Egypt's rising star Mohamed El Shorbagy to win the title for the first time. In June, Lincou returned to Reunion Island, the place of his birth, to star in the inaugural Internationaux de la Reunion. Much to the delight of the organisers and family members still living on the Indian Ocean island, Lincou reached the final and went on to beat Dutchman Laurens Jan Anjema to lift the title. Early in 2010, the indefatigable Frenchman reached the 40th PSA Tour final of his career at the Bluenose Classic in Canada – where, as third seed, he beat career-long rival David Palmer, the second-seeded Australian, in the semi-finals before despatching rising Englishman Daryl Selby in the final to win his 22nd career title. He went on to exceed his seeding in two PSA Super Series events of the year: In the North American Open in February, the ninth-seeded Lincou upset sixth seed Peter Barker to reach the quarter-finals – then, two months later, repeated his fine form in the Sky Open in Egypt where, seeded seven, he fought through to the semi-finals before bowing out to the future world number one Nick Matthew. It was in 2004, in Qatar, that world number one Lincou was seeded to reach the World Open final – but he went one better by beating top seed Lee Beachill to become world champion for the first time. He reached his first British Open final in September 2006 - doing so by ending David Palmer's two-year reign as champion in the semi-finals. Repeating his success the following year, Lincou contested the first ever all-French British Open final – and again finished as runner-up, to Gaultier. Back home at the beginning of 2009, Lincou again faced Gaultier in the final of the French National championships – but this time beat his close rival to lift the trophy for a remarkable 11th time! Away from the squash court, Thierry took time out in July 2006 to marry long-time partner Celine, mother of his daughter Jade - and, in July the following year, the couple celebrated the birth of their second daughter Paolo. Updated August 2010
